Almost without exception it will be found that he was reared in the country, or in a village with its rural advantages, or that prolonged visits to the country were made during his childhood. If one will write down the great names of any branch of knowledge or human activity, from the earliest times to the present day, and then will take the trouble to look up their early biography he will be impressed with the importance of the rural over the urban environment. This is all the more remarkable when we consider that about one-half the people live in the cities and that here are to be found the best schools...
