Using data collected at two points over a five year period, we found that the assignment of young engineers to work for project supervisors who were also functioning as technical gatekeepers significantly affected the organizational careers of these engineers, decreasing the probability of turnover and increasing the probability of promotion to management. Gatekeepers serve an important socialization function in RDE over and above their information acquisition role. More generally, the results indicate that supervisory behavior directly affects early work experiences which, in turn, dramatically affect long-term career outcomes.
